

Accessing Archaeology: A Conversation on Indigenous Knowledge and Heritage

Date: November 15, 2022

Time: 1:00-2:30 pm PST/4:00-5:30 EST

Cogstone's President Desiree Martinez will be a featured speaker in the National Museum of Natural History's "Accessing Archaeology: A Conversation on Indigenous Knowledge and Heritage." A brief summary of the program from the event website is provided below:

Archaeology lets us explore what it means to be human, but the field is shaped by those who participate in it and the knowledge systems they prioritize. This 90-minute panel discussion will highlight the importance of recognizing and including Indigenous traditional knowledge and perspectives as five Native American archaeologists share their experiences and challenges in a field created by colonizers.

Moderator: Dorothy Lippert (Smithsonian's National Museum of Natural History)

Featured Speakers: Desiree Renee Martinez (Cogstone Resource Management, Pimu Catalina Island Archaeology Project), Peter Nelson (University of California, Berkeley), Anastasia Walhovd (Makoons Consulting), and Joe Watkins (Archaeological and Cultural Education Consultants, LLC).

This presentation will be presented via Zoom video webinar and a link will be emailed to all registrants. Sign up to attend here:
